Having been granted city status during the Golden Jubilee celebrations of 2002 Stirling is Scotland's smallest city. Its heritage dates from the twelfth century when the town was granted a Royal Charter and became a significant medieval settlement. Historically, this gateway to the highlands was strategically important as it owned the lowest crossing point of the River Forth with marshland to the west; the river was otherwise impossible to cross for a long time. About the Author: Jack Gillon is a long-term resident of Edinburgh and has worked as a Town Planner involved in the conservation of the city's heritage of historic buildings for around thirty years and has an extensive knowledge of the city's history and architecture.
