In 1612 George Sinclair an illegitimate son of a Caithness laird became a Norwegian national hero. Along with almost 300 of his followers Sinclair was killed in an ambush in Norway while marching to join the King of Sweden's army. Sinclair has legendary status in Norway but has been totally forgotten in his home country just as the memory of thousands of other Scottish mercenaries who served in the armies of Europe in the 16th and 17th centuries has been forgotten. The role of Scots fighters in the British Empire is celebrated far and wide... but their exploits in Europe for the two centuries before that find little mention in history or popular literature. surveys, exploits and experiences of Scots who
